China's energy appetite is pushing it toward China's goal of reducing carbon dioxide emissions by 20% by 2020, says the Energy Information Administration. But even if China can make the promised improvements, the International Energy Agency says it will be hard to keep the United States from passing China as the world's biggest emitter. (June 18, 2010)